strew the roadsides and fill the hospitals. The most effective armies have been those in which the youngest soldiers have been twenty-two years of age. Fortunately we have had nothing but 'little wars' on our hands for many years, or the truth of these remarks would no doubt have received some mournful illustrations. Even in our conflict with savages.

however, the personnel of our army has not always in these latter days shown to great advantage. I am afraid poor old Octowayo's warriors or the fanatical spearmen of the Soudan would have made short work of the weedy boys-how different from the bold yeomen whose limbs were made in England' who in old days did battle for their country's honour !--whom we sent out against them, if they had fought on any thing like equal terms. I am not decrying the poor lade, who did their best, and at any rate knew how to die as heroically as the most seasoned veterans. They had plenty of pluck; it was not their fault that they were deficient in stamina. It is devoutly to be hoped, however, that our altars and hearths may have stronger arms than these to defend them if we are ever again engaged in a great European war.
